October 21, 2009

After ~50 years of use the water control structure along the Cato levee is no longer operational. It is being replaced this winter by the US Army Corps of Engineers. The large coffer dam (above) will allow them to replace the structure and keep water Castor River out during their construction efforts.