Marion Bottoms

CONSERVATION AREA

MISSOURI DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION

About this Area

Marion Bottoms is unusual in that it has no flood protection. When the Missouri River floods; water flows onto the 2,997 acre area. The flooded area serves as a relief valve which reduces local flood heights and durations, benefiting society and adjacent agricultural lands and riverside communities.

The connection of the Missouri River to its floodplain also benefits fish and wildlife habitat, including bottomland forests, sloughs, seasonal wetlands and open areas. Floodwaters replenish wetlands, create high-flow channels and scour holes, and deposit sand, silt and debris. These floodplain habitats nourish a diversity of fish and wildlife, including migratory waterfowl and songbirds.

Marion Bottoms offers a great experience for area users who prefer limited vehicle access. Walk-in area users can walk as far as their energy and ambitions allow on 13 miles of mowed paths and levees that are closed to vehicle travel. In addition, nearby Marion Access and Hartsburg Access provide boat-in access to the area's more remote corners that adjoin 5.5 miles of Missouri River and three miles of Moniteau Creek.

The purchase of Marion Bottoms in 1996 included an existing federal Emergency Wetland Reserve Program (EWRP) easement. The permanent easement is designated to promote, protect and enhance wetland functions. Any developments that interfere with wetland functions are prohibited.

Experimental Vehicle Access

A 2.5 mile field road has been opened on a seasonal basis to provide public vehicle access to Marion Bottoms. Because field-road maintenance is limited, the field road should be considered unimproved and portions of the road may at times be impassable due to wet areas, high-water crossings, silt, sand, debris, ruts or tree limbs. Conditions may not allow passage for vehicles with low clearance or poor traction. The entire road or portions of the road may be temporarily or permanently closed if road conditions are impassable due to rainfall, river flood events, poor road surface or abuses to area rules and resources such as off-road vehicle travel or illegal activities.

Field roads are permitted for access on EWRP tracts. Improvements such as road ditches, raised road beds, culverts or rock road surface are not permitted on field roads because they have the potential to alter or interfere with drainage, hydrology and wetland functions for which the EWRP easement was intended.
